Good Guys? Bad Guys?

A 7-year old asked a question concerning a toy cannon he received in a box of Cracker-Jacks.

"What da you do with it Dad?"

"Shoot people. When there are too many in your six-gun, you gotta use a bazuff."

"What do you shoot?"

"Bad guys. Just aim and POOF! Got 'em."

"But are the bad guys, Dad?"

The 7-year-old sister says: "Gertrude, Grammy. We were just studying about Indians."

"Yeah. That was last war. They're the bad guys now."

"But it's still wrong war. You're twenty years too late."

"Then who are the bad guys now?"

Dad pulls out the evening paper and reads: "Let's see. Oh yeah. This says they're the Canadians and the Russians and the Chinese, too. They're really bad guys."

"Well, that might helped us with the Indians." (Daughter.)

"Maybe. I'll look it on TV with Alan Ladd."

"Who's Alan Ladd?" (Four-year-old.)

"Good guy," said I. "Anyway, Japanese are good guys, and the Chinese are bad guys. French and Canadians are sort of bad. Just shoot over their heads once.

"Russians are bad most of the time. Just shoot Spaniards wearing mustaches. Ignore the English until the other party gets in.

"Don't shoot the South Americans until the next revolution.

"Aim at the Cuban munitions factories, but miss the cigar works."

"Don't we like anybody, Dad?"

"Well, son, Eastern half of the U. S. is the younger type, about unions, big business, concrete jungles and the Government. Down south they're mostly bigots and out west are those wicked movie stars. States surrounding us sell liker and firecrackers.

"Guess that just leave Iowans.

"Might as well put your cannon away. Just ain't enough good guys left on our side, pardner."

Four-year-old looks at the toy cannon sadly. Silently puts it away.

"Next time I'll buy a lollypop. This isn't no fun at all."

Missionary Must

Lesson for June 21, 1964

If a church is like a club, it is no true church. A club exists for the convenience, pleasure and benefit of its members. But a church is not chiefly for the benefit of its members, though they will receive many benefits by their being members. A club can close its doors and shut out anyone they don't like. But a church that is not open to all men, regardless, is not a true church. The minute Jesus said, "Go into all the world . . . make disciples of all peoples . . ." he opened the doors of the church once and for all, to every human being.

The church is mission"

Among the most memorable sayings of Jesus is this: "The Son of Man came not to be served but to serve." So the church exists to serve. When it forgets this, it days of useful ness are over. There are many forms of service in which the church can be active; but the basic, most vital service is winning souls, to use an old-fashioned but expressive slogan. The church exists for the transformation of lives from within. It is the only organization in the world with a purpose so profound and penetrating as this. Various words have been used to express this fundamental service of the church; too much used in our time are "evangelism" and "mission." It is often said that the church is mission, and this is true. The church as a whole, and every single person in it, is meant to be missionary in what it does and what it teaches. Christ's challenge is too plain for us to reject or neglect it.

Missionary here

Where is the place for the church — including you, if you are one of that great band — to be missionary? Not in some room in the church where the "missionary society" meets once a month. The whole church is meant to be missionary in the whole time. Missions cannot be and will not be shoved into a corner by a true church. We can illustrate what is meant by looking at the case of a church that ran away. It was in a large city, and the neighborhood changed, that is, the houses began to get run-down, and there were more people around than ever. But they were mostly people the church gentlemen and ladies did not care for. So they moved the church . . . and soon the nieborhood to which they moved started to run down, and so they moved . . . This went on for six moves, and finally one of the officers said sadly: "Seems there's no place that's safe: That church had been running away from people displaced people, discouraged people.

Missionary there

Every Christian, it can't be said too often, is called by God to be missionary — that is, to be a radiating Christian, where he is. But some people are specially called by God to be missionaries there — far off, overseas, in the Congo or the back country of Brazil or in some great crowded city like Tokyo or Seoul. But how can I know whether God so calls me? Well, it's like this: Suppose you are a good swimmer and you are standing at the edge of a pool. You notice at one end of the pool a number of swimmers having trouble, but there's quite a flock of life-savers about; at the other end there are more swimmers in trouble and nobody noting it or helping them. Now would you think you had to wait for a message from the skies to tell you what to do? Wouldn't your common sense tell you that if you can help where help is most needed, that's the place God wants you to be and to work? A need, and your ability to fill that need, is as good and plain a missionary call as you could ask for, to go there, from here. It may be that some are "sitting in darkness" this very day, waiting for you!

Foster Lewis On Honor Roll

Appomattox County's 4-H Honor Roll members includes Foster Lewis, a nine year 4-H Club member who found that pigs are profitable. During one of his best Project years Foster raised a Duroc gilt eight weeks old, raised her breeding size and she bore a litter of ten bigs. He fed them out to shoats, sold new and pigs for a profit of $200. Further purchases of a sow and a mate brought additional profits and the purchase of three black angus calves and bull. Then the Army called him, and he sold out his animals to his father for $425.00.

At the present time Foster is working in a trucking company in Baltimore in partnership with an uncle.

Sewing Class To Begin Tues.

A sewing class for adults and high school girls is being offered by the home economics teachers of Appomattox High School. The first meeting is scheduled for Tuesday, June 23 at 10 a.m. in the homemaking department.
